Dear Dr Fenichel,

This is only to thank you and let you know that your letter with its valuable enclosure has reached me safely. I shall write again at greater length when I've had time to digest it. — No. I've never seen it before — so there must be something else actually published. It was definitely critical. The point I can ~~definitely~~ ^{certainly} remember was a discussion of the question of prophylactic treatment of future conflicts and particularly of Freud's saying: 'Der Analytiker selbst kann nicht alle seine Konflikte in der Übertragung unterbringen' — 'Die endl. u. unendl. An.'

Zeitschrift, Bd 23 pp. 222 + 223. — I don't know if this is touched on in what you've sent me, as I've not yet read it through. — I will of course regard it as confidential.

Yes, thank you, I can now get along pretty well for all practical purposes — though only as a Cyclops. As regards your other kind enquiry: I think your last one was all that could be denied. As you know, we're highly suspicious, or would like to be.
With kindest regards from both of us, Yours sincerely,
James Strachey
