Dear Hanna:

Out of the welter of pleasant impressions that I bring back from the West stands a most agreeable picture of yourself and our extraordinarily condensed and meaty relationship. I shall never forget your kindness and generous hospitality, which was not only from the supermarket from also from the soul.

A nice letter awaited me from Dave Rapoport, and I am answering him immediately. I shall get from him a list of the papers, so that I may reread them at I hope a thoughtfully leisurely pace.

I broke my trip back at Denver, where I spent a pleasant day with my brother-in-law, John Benjamin. There was no Malibu Beach and a lovely cliff-hung shack, but he did ride me out to his ranch in a nearby canyon. I have no complaint as to the variety of experiences I have just had.

Please especially remember me to Frances Deri. Her impression upon me was deep, but from what I knew of her not unexpected. Still there are, as Freud says, two kinds of knowledge, and now I have both.

I must say that you lived up very nicely to expectations yourself, and I consider my meeting with you a most important advantage that I got from my journey.

und
Gruss ~~an~~ auf Wiedersehen!
